Adrian Benedetti carries off Nelson's over-the-top romanticism and disillusionment with passion and understanding. Directed by Chip Walton, Cloud Tectonics delivers the mythical vision of Rivera's script with ease: it rains, time stops, and we are touched by angelic love. It runs through June 15th at the Acoma Center.

Cloud Tectonics is a play by José Rivera, a dreamlike (and ultimately tragic) love story about its two protagonists, Aníbal de la Luna and Celestina del Sol. It is set in Los Angeles, with most of the action taking place in Aníbal's house. It is somewhat of the archetypal "boy meets girl" story—but it is truly told by a master of the form.

The play's title, "Cloud Tectonics," refers to the science of how clouds move. It is drawn from a line in the play that discusses Celestina's need for love; understanding this necessity is "like trying to understand the anatomy of the wind or the architecture of silence or cloud tectonics," as she says in the play.

In a college class (eons ago), I defined time as an artificial construct that allows us to keep events in order. I thought it a pretty good (if straight-ahead) definition, and so did the prof. But it took a poetic sensibility like playwright José Rivera to create “Cloud Tectonics,” a whole play about time, its deeper meanings and its effects on people and the universe.

Theater Review: "Cloud Tectonics" | San Diego Gay and ...

There's a quiet moment in "Cloud Tectonics" when Celestina, the lost pregnant innocent recites a love poem to the more worldly, slightly jaded male lead. She pours her love out to him in Spanish which, in true tragic fashion, he cannot understand. Each of these plays are about love, but not cliched. Its about sex, but not graphic.
