The Flaw In All Magic

The flaw in all magic is the mage who casts it. Mages are human and humans goof. That simple observation has driven Tane Carver's life, and it is how he makes his living. He has no magic himself but is outstanding at theory and can spot flaws in magic. Now the dean at his old school needs help to solve a locked room murder mystery.

The Flaw In All Magic (Magebreakers #1) by Ben S. Dobson

The Flaw in All Magic is a cannot - put - it - down fantasy mystery. It reminds me somewhat of Barbara Hambly's mysteries. But it really isn't at all like that. This book is fun from start to finish, but without being slapstick or the reliance on clichéd situations we have seen all too many times in fantasy novels.

Tane says that the flaw in all magic is the mage, or more specifically the mistakes in their writing that they didn't catch. At the end of the book, a gnome woman calls Tane and Kadka the Magebreakers. Even with the official story (which barely mentions them), rumors are spreading and they are gaining quite a reputation.

The Flaw in All Magic Posted on August 10, 2017 by bensdobson My latest novel is out: The Flaw in All Magic, book one of the Magebreakers series. It's a fantasy mystery thriller set in a world of magic-powered steampunk-like technology.

The Flaw In All Magic | The Scribes' Council

The Flaw in All Magic delivers on a string of action-packed sequences, but it's as much a locked room mystery, with the caveat that the author doesn't really play fair with parceling out the clues so that we can all play along. There are three main principals in the cast, all of whom I really liked. Tane Carver is your typical rumpled, smartass ...
